A PRELIMINARY BIBLIOGRAPHY OF THE ARCHAEOLOGY OF THE NEW ENGLAND INDIANS

Since its formation in 1939, the Bibliography Committee has been amassing a file of references concerning the Indians of Massachusetts and the other New England states. Members of the Society have cooperated by sending in on our standard bibliography cards the names of many important books and articles. The file now contains almost 900 different titles, which have been grouped by states and regions as follows: Connecticut, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Vermont, New England, and Eastern United States. The cards of each state are further subdivided by subject into the following sections: Archaeology, Ethnology, History, Linguistics, and Somatology. A separate section marked "General" contains miscellaneous references on the methods used in archaeology and the allied sciences.

Because a bibliography project is never finished, and because there exists among the members of the Society a growing demand for a more easily accessible bibliography, we are publishing in this issue of the Bulletin a portion of our file of references, all those concerned primarily with the archaeology of the aborigines of New England.

The many historical references which have been collected will not be ready for publication until they have been carefully investigated for their archaeological and ethnological content, a task beyond the scope of the present bibliographical project. It is hoped that this historical material will be of use in studies initiated by the Research Council. The first step might well be a project to look into the historical references already gathered, and to record or brief the archaeologically and ethnologically significant passages.

We wish to thank Douglas S. Byers and Frederick Johnson of the Department of Archaeology, Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass., for placing their private and library files at our disposal; Henry Hornblower 2nd for adding his extensive list of titles to our cards; William J. Howes for the bibliography he had typed for us; the other members of the Massachusetts Archaeological Society who have contributed references; the staff of the Peabody Museum of Harvard University for access to the library files; and Irving Rouse, who, with his collaborators, produced "A Preliminary Archaeological Bibliography of the Eastern United States," from which we drew both facts and inspiration.

A list of the abbreviations used will be found at the end of this issue.
